Discussion/interpretation:

The Oregon HCBS rules allow for the proposal of limitations (individually-based limitations, or IBLs) of the following rights to protect the health or safety of the individual or others when less restrictive alternatives are not adequate in keeping the person or others safe.

- Access to food at any time
- Locked door for privacy

- Choice of roommates
- Ability to decorate and furnish room
- Ability to control one's schedule
- Access to visitors at any time
- Freedom from restraints

The rule also requires the individual or their representative consent to the proposed limitations.

When it is believed that an individual may be at further risk because they do not understand the consequences of the proposed limitation and a Doctor or other health professional (who does not work for the individual's care facility) agrees in writing that the person cannot make the decisions under consideration, use any responsible adult that has a history of positively relating to the individual to support the person and act as a representative for the IBL decision, unless objected to by the individual. Use anyone already designated in writing first, such as anyone designated on the APD 0737 or advanced health care directive. Use the following priority order to determine who is willing and available for use if no one is designated in writing or when choosing from multiple options.

- Guardian or other legal representative
- Spouse
- Majority of adult children
- Parent
- Majority of adult siblings
- Any adult relative or friend
- Team as defined in this policy

When no one is available to support or assist the individual who cannot make decisions, reflected in a written statement from a doctor or other health professional, a team of two or more may make the decision about whether to implement the proposed limitation. The team must include, at minimum, the provider, doctor or other health professional, and Medicaid Case Manager, if applicable. All team members must agree that the proposed limitation is the least restrictive method available for protecting the individual. If anyone on the team disagrees, the proposed limitation may not be implemented; the individual will retain their HCBS rights.

This policy is consistent with APD's broad protective services responsibility to protect individuals from harm, including self-neglect, while also protecting the basic rights of individuals to make their own decisions and choices whenever possible.

Attached are decision charts to assist in guiding the actions needed to implement this policy.

COVID-19 emergency restrictions, such as face-to-face visiting, do not need to be documented as an IBL. Please note that rights to visit still exist but may take more precautionary measures and methods such as telephone, video or other technology supported visits or with physical barriers like windows to protect the individual and others.
